The steamer Roland, which arrived from Bremen this morning, reported two cases of small-pox among the steerage pasesngers. There were 453 persons int he steerage. The patients are two children who became ill soon after the steamer left Bromen. They will be transferred to the Reception Hospital. The Roland is in quarantine, and will be thoroughly disinfected before being

Richard Potter, a well-known young society man and a member of the Country Club at Westchester, is a patient in the observation ward of the Reception Hospital. Mr. Potter believed last Saturday that he had contracted smallpox while visiting a house in Westchester, and immediately went to the Reception Hospital.

Dr. Doty, Chief of the Bureau of Contagious Diseases, said to an "Evening World" reporter to day: "I saw Mr. Potter last Monday. He had pimples and a rash on his face and arms. While I cannot say he was suffering from small-pox, I think the symtoms will so develop. I shall know that to-day when I visit the hospital. Should Mr. Potter's case not be virulent, possibly he will not be sent to North Brother Island, but kept in the observation ward till he recovers. Should the case, however, prove to be virulent he will be sent to the Island.

"There has been no discrimination made in Mr. Potter's case. It is a common matter to keep cases that are not well defined in the observation ward."

not well defined in the observation ward."

Richard Potter is a brother of E. C. Potter, who married Miss Emily Havemeyer, and of Robert L. and Julian Potter. Though obliged to use crutches, he is an expert swimmer and a prominent member of Newport society.

The Board of Health officials boarded the White Star liner Majestic as soon as she docked yesterday, and removed George H. Walton, eight years old, from the cabin of his father, John W. Walton, to the Reception Hospital. The boy was suffering from measles. Mr. Walton and his son were on their way home to Pittsburg. When but a few days out at sea the boy developed the disease. The cabin occupied by the Waltons was fumigated.

ON MEXICO'S FRONTIER.

Capt. Bourke Describes a Typical Rancho on the Rio Grande.

The Mexican rancho, from Laredo clear down to the Gulf, adheres strictly to the one model; to describe one is to cribe all, the difference being principally those of size and population.

pally those of size and population.

There is always a "plaza" or "placeta" in the centre, writes Capt, J. G. Bourke, U.S.A., in Scribner; if the rancho be unusually large, there may be two or even three such little squares, which serve all purposes of business, recreation, or, when necessary, religious functions. From these radiate the streets, unpayed and dusty, sometimes shaded by the overhanging branches of trees, but oftener left to the full glare of the sun and force of wind.

The two or three petty stores, or "tendajos," are fond of displaying sonorous names quite as high-toned as the prices charged; but the other structures are mainly of the class called in this section of Texas "tecaruchos" or "jacales."

"It was none of my affair," said the lean man, carelessly,
"Where was this?" blurted the stout man, growing fierce.
"Oh, on a street car. The little girl's mother held her up so the conductor could take the fare.
The stout man collapsed, and the lean man continued to look as if he was not in any way interested in the case.

cales."

To make a "jacal" the owner inserts half a doken stout poles of mesquite or ebony or huisachi at the proposed corners, and then fills in with a wattle-work which may or may not be daubed with mud, according to the exigencies of climate, the depth of the builder's purse, or his sense of the aesthetic.

Inside there may be a table and there may not—generally there is none; chairs are never seen, their places being supplied by stools made of an appropriately shaped root.

Should you seek for carpets, stoves, tableware, kitchen utensils, beds-for any of the comforts and conveniences which the humblest workingman demands as a right in the more favorable parts of the Union—you would week in vain; there are absolutely mone to be seen. These people live in a squador and degradation which words connot adequately portray. Nothing in Ireland or Russia can approach the destitution of the lower Rio Grande, where, fortunately, Providence has been kind enough to grant the finest weather for the poor in all the world.

In the native quarters of the towns of India the strange spectacle may be seen of a butcher seizing a piece of meat in his hands and counting it in two with a stroke of his half second toes of his root. The shoemaker uses no last, says Pearson's Weekly, but turns the unimished shoe with his feet, while his hands are busy in shaping it. So the carpenter holds with his great toe the board he is cutting and the woodturner handles his roots as well with his toes as with his fingers. The shoe-maker uses no last, says Pearson's Week-siy, but turns the uninsished shoe with his feet, while his hands are busy in shaping it. So the carpenter holds with his great toe the board he is cutting and the woodturner handles his tools as well with his toes as with his fingers. This use of the feet to assist the hands in their labor is not, however, the mere result of practice, but is principally due to the fact that the Hindoo foot is quite different from ours in its anatomical conformation. The ankle of the Hindoo and the articulation of the back of the foot permit considerable lateral motion. Then the toes possess a surprising mobility. The preat toe can be moved freely in all directions, and the first and second toes are separated by a wide space, sometimes as much as five-eighth of an inch across at their extremities. The articulation of the hip is also peculiar, and this renders it easier to use the toes in handling the objects by enabling the Hindoo to sit in a squatting posture much more comfortably than we do. A similar formation of the feet and toes is found among the Annamese, but it is not, as might be supposed, a common thing among barksrous and savage tribes.

One naturally thinks of the resemblance to a monkey which a human being using both feet and made in the manner described above must present and yet M. Regnault is careful to point out the fact that the Hindoo fool is not at all like the foot of an ape or monkey. The great toe is not opposed to the other toes like a thumb, as occurs with the monkey, and accordingly the peals dexterity of the Hindoos is not to be taken as an indication of simian descent.

Apples as Medicine.

Apples as Medicine.

The remedial use of apples is worthy of notice, says the North American Practitioner. The German analysis say that the apple contains a larger percentage of phosphorus than any other fruit or versetable. The phosphorus is admirably adapted for renewing the essential nervous matter—legithin—of the brain and spinal esrel. It is, perhaps, for the same reason, rudely understood, that old Scandinavian traditions represent the apple as the fruit of the gods, who, when they felt themselves to be growing feeble and infirm, resorted to this fruit, remediate the powers of mird and body. Also, the acids of the apple are of singular use for men of security habits, whose livers are sluggest in action, those acids serving to eliminate from the body noxious matters which, if retained, would make the brain heavy and duil or bring about jaundice or skin eruptions and other allied troubles.

Dion Boucleault started on presentation sneaked into the home of Mrs. Fred out to build a four-act play on the Roar-Low, 420 Dean street, and after fright- ing Camp yarn, but he died after finening her and her servant almost into ishing the first act. This relique of the hysterics by hugging them, disappeared old dramatist has been secured by as completely as if the earth had opened Charles Frohman, who will produce it at the Empire Theatre Monday night Mrs. Low was sitting in her parlor at night, and called her servant, Lizzie forell, to instruct her in regard toher ousehold duties. with the new three-act comedy "Gudgeons." Boucleault introduces into the famous camp characters frem other Morell, to instruct her in regard toher household duties.

While the women were talking a pet dog rushed out into the hallway and began barking. Mrs. Low and girl went out to learn the cause. As they stepped out of the parlor a man's arms entircled their waists. After embracing them the fellow made good his escape.

The woman ran out upon the street and called for help. Several neighbors reached the premises, and the police were notified of the affair by telephone. Capt. Early and a squad of officers hurried to the house and found all the doors and windows secured. Nobody saw the man leave by the front door.

The girl told the police that a young man of her acquaintance had left the rouse just before she was called into the parior, and she is certain that she locked the door after she went out.

The police think that it was this yeing man who hugg d'the women. Bret Harte stories. Jack Oakhurst, the gambler, and Tennessee's partner figure in the incidents. There is only one woman, Stumpy's Wife, and May Robson will do justice to that. The stage story begins with the miners discussing the possibilities of fortune in the new gold field. The body of a woman is found and with it a child. This child is "The Luck." In burying the woman gold is struck at the bottom of her grave. The Roaring Camp rejoices, and the child is adopted by the community on the spot, and 39 per cent, of the gold product of the place is voted to her. Stumpy and his wife, who has followed him from Sait Lake, reckless of the law of the camp, that any woman who enters it must be killed, furnish the comedy ingredients.

One of the sights of Broadway early in the morning is pink and white Lillian Russell-Perugini shopping in a navy blue coupe, with linen linings and prancing bays. The other morning about 11 o'clock she was coming from her shoemaker's, in Delimonico's neighborhood. She was alone. She wore some sort of a Paris frock, with stripes of lace running round her corsage and sleeves, and a rick-rack kind of a hat, with nodding red roses on the crown. She was prettier than ever, her bright color and fair hair suggesting a rose in a wheat field. The way Mme. Lillian holds her own after nearly twenty years of grease paint and green own skirmishes is something that neither her enemies nor friends can understand. She has taken care of herself, to be sure, but so have hundreds of other women in the profession who are haggard and scrawny at thirty and frights of forter. And Yet, After All, the Little Tot "This highway business is getting so had that something must be done soon," said the stout man to a St. Louis Post-Despatch reporter, as he looked over his free paper and read of another hold-up. "Why, just the other day my daughter was going home about 6 o'clock, when she was stopped by a man who said he wanted her money. She just yelled as loud as she could and ran. There was no one in sight or hearing, but the fellow evidently got scared and quit, and she got home all right."

"That was terrible," said the lean man with the serious face.
"It was, for a fact," said the stout man. This highway business is getting so I that something must be done soon," sion who are haggard and scrawny at thirty and frights at forty.

"It was, for a fact," said the stout man.
"Not a circumstance to a case I saw the other day," said the lean man, as if he didn't care if the subject were dropped right there or not.
"What's that?" said the stout man.
"Fact. Not half as bad as one I saw the other day,"
"What was it?" asked the stout man, as the gang began to listen. "Sowing the Wind," which will end its long run at the Empire Theatre Saturday night, with its success still at the highest notch has in five months made a profit of $50,000 for Manager Charles Frohman and paid Sydney Grundy, its English author, nearly $20,000 in royalites. Under the old-time terms made with foreign authors, $16 for a night performance and $5 for a matinee, Mr. Grundy's "sex against sex" play would have yielded him less than $1,500 in royalites in the same time. A successful playmaker gets rich quickly in these days.

Adele Bitchie, who is constantly re-"What was it?" asked the stout man, as the gaing began to listen.
"Well, I hate to tell it; but if you insist on the story I guess I'l have to tell it briefly. It happened in the presence of at least twenty people, and I am serry to say I was one of them. A little girl not over five years of age was held up, and ten cents and a child's car ticket taken from her, and never a soul to offer an objection."

Why didn't you get up and do something?" asked the stout man, indigmantly.

Adele Ritchie, who is constantly remembering that until recently she was the stellar head of a comic opera organization, every member of which was subservient to her wishes, had a more than ordinarily unpleasant clash at "The Passing Show" rehearsal yesterday with Mr. Paul Arthur, and she started to leave the theatre. On her way out she saw Proprietor Thomas Canary and stopped to talk with him. In less than six minutes he had her laughing merrily, and accompanied by him she returned to the stage, where he said to his partner, Mr. Lederer: "You do not know how to handle young girls. Why don't you take lessons. This little girl is one of the easiest-going creatures you ever saw. Now, just take her out and buy her a nice big plate of ice cream and a nice place of cake and everything will be all right." Miss Ritchie was delighted. Mr. Canary may yet earn a reputation as the great and only prima donna pacificator.

"So much has been written about the Hudson River—its terraces and verdure that one would think that there is not another beautiful river in the country." Said a man who loves Kentucky in the Louisville Courier-Journal, "but such an idea is all wrong. I want to rise to explain that the Ohio River is as attractive as the Hudson ever was, and any one who lia late Spring will take a ride to Cairo will see that I am not speaking as a prejudiced man. Beyeaking as a prejudiced in an one will find landscapes that would make artists rave, especially those artists who now admire the Hudson. The robbery was discovered this morning when Sexton John Brady opened the doors for those attending early mass. A number of the parishloners went into the building at the same time as the sexton, and saw that the locks had been broken off the boxes in which contributions for the poor had been placed and that the contents had been removed. It is not known how much money was in the boxes.

Sexton Brady closed the building at 10.30 o'clock last night after services. He is sure the boxes were all right then.
